

Introduction to Handwriting Analysis

Handwriting Analysis can identify your sub-conscious and conscious personality traits. These traits relate to your behavior, motivations, sexuality, ambitions and other personality variations. It can also tell you about your ambition, the fears you've suffered and developed since childhood, emotions as well as current feelings and frustration at the time of writing (only original handwriting can show the accuracy through pen pressure on paper).

(Sample) Handwriting Analysis –
[General Manager]
(Mike-Not real name)

SAMPLE OF REPORT

Mike has a temper. (His t-bar is crossed predominantly on the right side of the stem). He uses this as a defence mechanism when he does not understand how to handle a situation. It is a trait used to protect the ego. Temper can be a negative personality trait in the eyes of those around him.

Based on other t-bar trait, Mike T-bar is crossed predominantly on the left side of the t-stem. It is one factor trait of laziness. He will put off until tomorrow what could have been done today.

Mike's t-bar including this last t-bar trait consists of 3 types which appear consistently. His one last t-bar that does not touch the t-stem indicates his goals that do not reach reality. His ambition might be great but it is not practical in real life.

Due to Mike's d-stem and t-stem which shows large looped, he will feel more painful to criticism. He is sensitive to criticism that relates to his appearance (d-stem) and about his ideas and philosophies (t-stem). He will sometimes worry what other people think if he tells them what he believes in. Although he is sensitive to what others think, this doesn't mean he won't talk or feels ashamed. And if someone hurts him, he might forgive the person but he will never forget what this person did to him. His deep pen pressure on the paper implies his emotion towards others.

Mike is talkative. A very chatty person and sometimes he talks just to hear his own voice. He may talk when there is absolutely nothing important to say. He likes to talk but he can tune other people out. (Closed-mindedness). His retraced e's indicates he is a selective listener.

Being a general manager, optimism is an important trait and his upward slant although not too noticeable; still indicate that he is optimist about his future. He will look on the bright side of life and sure that tomorrow will be better.

SAMPLE OF REPORT

Persistency is another interesting trait. Mike has a quality personality of not giving up when confronted with temporary setbacks. He will persist until he completes his task. Although it may take longer time for him to finish the project, he will still face with it.

Mike lower case p shows average to large loops. It indicate desire for more physical activity such as exercise, travel or sex. His y-loop without finishing loop on the other hand indicates his physical frustration. Probably what he desires are not able to achieve.

During writing, Mike might be in a hurry. This is shown in his dashed i-dots. Apart from that i-dots to the right do indicate his anger towards people. Who? Probably his customer or colleagues.

The reliability of the above analysis...Is it true?

Feedback from colleagues proves the accuracy of handwriting analysis (over 100 years of proven psychological science).

His goal which does not touch the reality, whatever he says is not being practiced, probably sometimes. His temper and persistency in giving instruction is not being liked by most of his colleagues. Through observation, his being 'loud' proves his talkativeness and will say things out to be heard although what he said might not be important in the discussion.

He might be loud but on the other hand he only listens to people who might be of interest to him. Whatever explanation he might regard it as not vital. It is not a surprise if some colleagues did claim that he do not want to listen to junior executives comments and ideas.
